

MSCF Career Services Code of Conduct

Orientation 2018

Recruiting Ethics

- Always act as a community (help your classmates)
- One action can destroy a recruiting relationship—for you, the school, and the MSCF program
- It is your responsibility as a member of the MSCF community to behave “ethically” and adhere to the principles outlined in the Code of Conduct
- Since individual ethics vary in any population, we need to define and enforce “rules”...😊

A Real-Life Example

- Jane is pursuing her dream career in trading.
- In October, Jane landed interviews with two of her most desirable banks in New York. As a fallback option, she also interviewed for a risk management internship with a smaller firm in Hong Kong with the help of an MSCF Alumnus.
- In November, Jane was disappointed to receive a rejection letter from one of the New York banks. The other New York bank contacted her to say they did not have a position for her presently, but they “liked her” and would “keep her resume on file” should anything come up.

A Real-Life Example

- Jane then received an offer for the risk management internship in Hong Kong. Feeling too “stressed” over her internship search situation, Jane decided to immediately accept this offer.
- The following week, Jane received a call from the bank in New York that had agreed to “keep her resume on file”. Jane told the New York bank she had already accepted another offer and the bank encouraged her to interview with them anyway for a full-time position next year.

A Real-Life Example

- Despite accepting the HK offer, she interviewed with the NY firm anyways.
- Two days later, Jane received a trading internship offer from the New York bank. Despite her commitment to the other firm, she now had the chance to accept her “dream job”. The company sweetened the deal by giving her a 10k signing bonus if she accepted.

A Real-Life Example

Assuming that Jane accepts the NY trading offer and reneges on HK acceptance:

- What will the Hong Kong firm think about Jane and MSCF when she reneges?
- What will the MSCF Alumnus think of Jane and MSCF?
- What should MSCF “do” about Jane’s actions and why?

A Real-Life Example

Assuming that Jane declines the NY trading offer and keeps her word:

- What should MSCF “do” about Jane actions? Why?

What could/should Jane have done differently?

A Real-Life Example

Additional Real-Life Concerns:

- The risk management internship in Hong Kong was the “dream job” for several of Jane’s classmates who didn’t get an offer; how will this affect them?
- The risk management recruiter in Hong Kong knows the recruiter at the New York bank very well, since they used to work together. What might happen now?
- Both firms may think less of the MSCF Program and stop recruiting...

MSCF Career Services Code of Conduct

- Pass out Code and review contents
- Students sign and return
- Questions?

Questions?

- Next Career Session: Business and Fashion 101 with Christina Stein on Thursday

Career Counselors:

- Katie Cassarly (PGH): katiecassarly@cmu.edu
- Sondi Pripstein (NY): sondip@cmu.edu

Recruiting Coordinator:

- Queeta Welch (NY): qhw@cmu.edu